Vote to Re-Elect Chester R. Montgomery Prosecuting Attorney of St. Joseph County

A Record is Montgomery's Endorsement for Re-Election

A record in office speaks for itself. It may be an endorsement, or it may be a detriment, to one's candidacy for re-election. The public certainly is not unacquainted with the record and conduct of Montgomery since he has been in office.

Few offices are more difficult to administer than that of prosecuting attorney. It offers complex and unpleasant duties without number. There is no office where one's actions are more apt to be misunderstood, or more apt to be the subject of suspicion.

Is it significant that since Montgomery took office there has been an absence of public criticism of his administration? Newspapers come in daily contact with the prosecutor's office. They know what is going on. They print the news. They know the motives and reasons for almost every official act.

This is something to think about when you cast your vote next Tuesday, November 7th.

A PERSONAL STATEMENT BY MONTGOMERY

Upon assuming the duties of prosecuting attorney, I resolved, above everything, to conduct the office in a manner that would eliminate any possible suspicion of graft or dishonesty. I have never instituted prosecutions for the purpose of collecting revenue, either directly or indirectly, from violators of the law, and absolutely no such revenue has ever been so collected since I have been in office. Nor have I profited, whatever, from any other form of wrongful gain. Has the first intimation to the contrary ever been received by the public?

I became prosecuting attorney obligated to no person, nor to any interest of whatever character. The laws have been enforced impartially, and without discrimination. I have not refused to prosecute, in a single instance, when evidence warranted criminal action. Every case, without exception, has been prosecuted with vigor and determination to the limit of the evidence at hand.

It is known that I have handled a large number of important criminal cases. My entire energy and ability I devoted to the preparation and trial of these cases. It is for the public to judge, not for me to say, whether or not I have been successful in the trial of such cases.

Innumerable minor cases form a large portion of the daily work of the prosecuting attorney—about two thousand cases arising during a year. These cases, in the office and in the court room, have deservedly received painstaking care and attention. The community's welfare is affected greatly, for good or evil, by the proper handling and treatment of minor offenders.

A state's attorney of today is no longer a mere pleader of state cases. The questions of crime and its punishment, the reformation of criminal offenders, and kindred subjects, are questions engaging the attention of some of the best present-day thinkers and writers. It is engaging increasingly the attention of the public mind as being of economic as well as of humanitarian importance.

Not only from duty, but also from personal interest, I have devoted study to such problems, and am attempting constantly a practical application of advanced principles in dealing with all classes of offenders and delinquents.

If my work in office has appealed to the public as capable and satisfactory, if I have maintained the office upon a high plane, if I have offered service of just, impartial, faithful performance of duty—should such service merit reelection—would the community profit by retaining such service?

This statement, set forth as frankly as I know how, is a suggestion that my record be considered for what it may be worth, in my candidacy for reelection.
